I bought this book, like most people, to help me find appropriate books for my children as they grow. I was an avid reader from third grade on, but I mostly read Nancy Drew and other thrillers (R.L. Stine & Christopher Pike, and eventually Stephen King), so other than the required reading in school and an odd book here and there, I wasn't very familiar with children books. And going into the book store can be overwhelming because there is just so much to choose from, and I really wanted what we would be reading worthwhile. At first I was a little disappointed in the list, because as my children are 2 and younger, I was particularly interested in that age group, but there was only five books listed under this category (board books). However, after discovering the "beyond the 100 Best" list in the back of the book, I was no longer disappointed. Here she has several lists which include: Preschool Books, Alphabet Books, Counting Books, Nursery Rhymes, Animal/Horse Stories, Dog Stories, Fantasy, Animal Fantasy, Historical Fiction, Science Fiction, Survival Stories, Classics, Information Books, Multicultural Books, Myths, Legends and Folklore, Poetry, and Books to Help Locate Other Titles. In addition to these many lists, she also has the main lists from the book, but includes many other books besides those discussed. These lists are: Board Books (referred as Preschool Books in the list in the back of the book), Picture Books, Books for Beginning Readers, Books for Young Readers, Books for Middle Readers, and Books for Older Readers. In the main part of the book, each book on the list gets a page or two of information about it (whereas, the lists in the back of the book are just lists of titles and their authors).
