Synopsis

In the near future, the federal government creates a committee to rid society of books it deems unsuitable. The libraries vow to protect their collections, and with the help of local governments, form a military group to defend themselves--the Library Forces! The war between the Library Forces and the government's censorship committee heats up! Iku Kasahara, once a lowly Library Forces recruit, is now a high-profile militia member, undercover and off the radar as she accompanies a censored author to a foreign embassy. All the while, her mentor and secret love Dojo is recovering from a gunshot wound. The last time she saw Dojo, Iku vowed to tell him her true feelings, but now she's not sure she can go through with it. Are Iku and Dojo destined to be together, or will the battle for books tear them apart?

This was a more plot-heavy volume. There's a big ruckus because someone is posting blistering book reviews on the library's site. There's also a revelation that someone at the library is involved with book burning, which puts a strain on the possible (?) love interest Shibasaki has been meeting for lunch (although I'm not convinced she actually likes him very much). We get a lot more insight into Tezuka's character and past. His older brother, who is to become very important to all that's going on, is in this volume quite a bit and we get to see the brothers' interaction and what caused the rift between them. And thus begins the story arc about the Inquiry--a sort of Spanish-Inquisition-like process (minus the physical torture) in which the committee interrogates their target until they break and confess to whatever they're accused of. As if that's not bad enough, the person also ends up shunned by those in the dorms and at work, because of the stigma of being a suspect. It can go on for as long as the committee wants. Iku learns that Dojo has gone through the trauma of an Inquiry, though no one will tell her what for. And then, against all odds, Kasahara herself is implicated and must undergo an inquiry of her own. It's really touching to see how upset Dojo is about this, having gone through one himself and knowing how terrible they are, and the lengths he goes to in caring for her during the ordeal. Love his promise to protect her. And it's really heartwarming to see her team all band together to try and help her get through the Inquiry. I love how this trial really brings out more of Dojo's tenderness toward Kasahara and we even see him smile and openly give her the approval she's always looking for. I think she impresses him with her perseverance.
